An embarrassing accident with art

Tate Britain is an art gallery in London. In 2004 there was an embarrassing accident with one of the works of art in the gallery. The gallery was closed at the end of the day and the cleaners were doing their job, cleaning up after all the visitors. But one of the cleaners tidied up a work of art and put it in the bin.

It is difficult to imagine somebody throwing a work by Picasso, Leonardo da Vinci or Van Gogh in the bin. But this work of art was simply a bag of rubbish. It had old paper and cardboard inside. Yes, that was the work of art: a transparent, plastic bag full of rubbish. It was made by Gustav Metzger. Metzger invented 'auto-destructive' art in 1959.

The next morning, the gallery officials arrived. They were looking around when they realized that the work of art wasn't there. They immediately started to look for it in the bins. They were lucky. They found it, but the bag was in poor condition. That wasn't a big problem because the artist simply put the rubbish in a new plastic bag and took it back to the gallery. Officials at the gallery now cover the work of art at night to protect it, and they tell the cleaners not to throw it away!
