PLENTY OF RED, BUT WHERE'S THE GREEN

1 A red river of bodies flooded the narrow streets of Buñol, Valencia, recently to take part in what has become internationally known as Tomatina. The majority of the 40,000 people, who came to throw almost 120 tonnes of tomatoes, hailed from Europe, Russia, Japan and even Australia. But is there an equally strong river of euros flowing into the 5 town to justify the cost?

Buñol spends almost half of its €200,000 annual budget for this event, and apart from getting worldwide recognition, the town council fails to gain much else. One can think that at least the local tomato growers would benefit by selling their tomatoes, but that's not the case. The tomatoes used in the festival are specially grown in Castellón,
10 paid for, and transported by lorry into town. Moreover, the majority of participants only stayed for the one-hour duration of the fight and then left town, wallets firmly shut. Take Londoner Brian Camp "we flew into Valencia, stayed in a hostel there and jumped on a train this morning with the bare essentials —enough money for the train back and the clothes on my back". The clothes on Brian's back included a Tomatina T-shirt paid
15 for as part of the tour packaged organized by the travel agency. The official T-shirt sold on the Tomatina website was barely visible in the festival.

Many in Buñol defend it as a tradition, but also agree it has lost its local roots. It has become an event almost entirely for foreigners. Although the people are coming, neither Buñol nor Valencia are profiting economically or culturally from this event.

When I was young, I always wanted ___(1)___ a scientist, but to tell you the truth; I did not know ___(2)___ that really meant. I thought of great names such as Albert Einstein or Madame Curie, and took for granted that a scientist life consisted in amazing discoveries and fascinating ideas that came out of the blue. I couldn't be more wrong! But at that time, I was only a child who ___(3)___ most of his free time alone ___(4)___ home, with his dog as his only companion. So I decided I had to find my way to become ___(5)___ famous scientist in the world.

___(6)___ a Saturday morning, while I ___(7)___ my dog as usual, then it all became clear to me. I recalled a voice on the radio announcing a national contest for young inventors. The rules were simple: participants ___(8)___ be under 16 and propose original ideas. The prize was a patent for your invention and your name written down in the most popular scientist magazines in the country. I couldn't miss that opportunity, I was sure I ___(9)___ be the winner! Unfortunately, I wasn't. My idea was not that fascinating in the end.

___(10)___, I work for one of the largest laboratories in the USA and I am in charge of a team of young scientists who work very hard everyday to come up with little ideas that will become great discoveries.
