A new American fast-food chain has just opened its first restaurant in Britain. “The Nashville Superburger Bar” is just off Leicester Square. Because of the success of similar fast food chains, I was interested to see if this place had anything new to offer. The restaurant was so brightly-lit that I wished I had brought my sunglasses. Once I had got used to the light, I rather liked the green and orange plastic decoration, which was very futuristic. The place was spotlessly clean, almost antiseptic. There was a long queue but the service was incredibly fast.

The menu was limited to a variety of hamburgers and prices were very reasonable. I had the “Giant Superburger” which was served with generous helping of french fries. Although the burger itself was rather tasteless, there was a large selection of relishes on every table and the french fries were the best I have ever tasted. This kind of establishment obviously caters for young people in a hurry. I was amazed to see that many of the customers were under 25 and alone.

Everybody seemed to be drinking milkshakes and although I’m not very fond of them I felt I should have one. Not much can go wrong with a milkshake and it tasted as good or as bad as any other. I think it is a quick and efficient way of taking nourishment, but you wouldn’t choose this place for a quiet and romantic evening with a friend. Although I wasn’t in a hurry I was in, fed, and out in ten minutes. It reminded me very much of a motorway filling station.
