READING

Read the following text carefully and answer the questions.

While London prepares to host the Olympics for the first time for 64 years in 2012, four other cities are competing to be the British capital's successor in 2016.

Chicago, Madrid, Rio and Tokyo submitted their bids to the International Olympic Committee by the 12 February deadline. A decision on who will host the 2016 Games is to be announced in Copenhagen, Denmark, on 2 October.

BBC Sport takes a look at the four cities trying to host the 2016 Olympic Games.

Chicago 2016 representative for the Games thinks they have two great plusses: - the City itself, the passionate, sports-loving diverse people of their city and the plan itself, as the project would be developed in the heart of the city; so he said: "if the Olympics come here, people will walk out of their hotel and straight into sports venues, or our theatres, our museums, our restaurants. It's a very city-central Games".

Madrid, on the other hand, boasts it is a city "open to the rest of the world" where thousands of people from other areas of Spain and the international community live together and it also embraces culture and sport. It is also proud of its cultural and historical heritage. A wide variety of well-known representatives of the Spanish political, business and sports scene are backing the Madrid candidature.

In 2007, Rio de Janeiro staged the Pan American Games and the Parapan American Games in succession, using the same facilities for both events. This model was praised by the leaders of the Americas Paralympics Committee (APC). Consequently, Rio de Janeiro is one of the few cities of the world to have the experience of organizing two major multi-sports events one right after the other.

Finally, the last candidate: Tokyo, despite its successful staging of the 2002 Football World Cup, could suffer from the fact that Beijing hosted the Games in 2008, although it would not be the first time the Olympics have been staged on the same continent within eight years.
